

A Fact Sheet on
Supported Decision Making and Support Networks

What is the Adults Living with an Intellectual Disability Act?

On October 4, 1996, The Adults Living with an Intellectual Disability Act (previously called The Vulnerable Persons Living with a Mental Disability Act) came into force in Manitoba.

The Act was developed to promote and protect the rights of adults living with an intellectual disability who need assistance to meet their basic needs. The legislation recognizes those Manitobans as "adults living with an intellectual disability".

The Adults Living with an Intellectual Disability Act reflects the right of all people to make their own decisions and have help, where necessary, in a manner that respects their independence, privacy and dignity.

What is supported decision making?

Like many Manitobans, adults living with an intellectual disability sometimes rely on the advice and assistance of others when making decisions. They may call upon their support network - that is, their parents, other family members or friends - to help them understand their choices. The members of the support network can provide information, ideas and advice that help adults living with an intellectual disability to make their own decisions. This is what supported decision making means: adults living with an intellectual disability making their own decisions, with support and advice from family and friends, if desired.

What is a support network and who can participate?

A support network is one or more persons who, over the short or long-term, provide advice, support or assistance at the request of, or in response to the needs of an adult living with an intellectual disability. A support network may be made up of family members, friends, service providers and others chosen by the adult living with an intellectual disability. Most often, it comprises people who have a personal connection to the adult living with an intellectual disability. Typically, they are the people with whom the adult living with an intellectual disability lives, works and socializes.

What is the role of a support network?

This depends largely on the wishes and needs of the adult living with an intellectual disability. The following are just a few examples of the support and assistance that support network members may provide:

- being involved in the individual planning process;
- supporting the person in making choices and decisions;
- helping the person to carry out functions that they may not be able to do alone;
- helping the person to understand and communicate; and
- linking the person to the larger community to strengthen the circle of support.

How much time is involved?

This depends on the needs and wishes of the adult living with an intellectual disability and the time that support network members can give. The actual time involved depends on what the support network does and why it came together.

Must an adult living with an intellectual disability have a support network?

No. The decision to have a support network ultimately rests with the adult living with an intellectual disability. The Act encourages the involvement of support networks because they offer the greatest potential for the self-determination, independence and dignity of adults living with an intellectual disability.
